Strange Court Cases in Kansas

By Mike Durall

Since statehood, Kansas has had its share of charlatans, grifters, outlaws, gunslingers, imposters, quacks, swindlers, con men and women, mortgage schemers, murderers, fakes, and frauds who found themselves in court.

Let's take a look at some interesting examples.

In the 1870s, in Shawnee County, a family of 13, many of whom were thieves, grew hay and built hollow haystacks to hide their stolen loot. The sheriff caught up with them and found two full wagonloads of pilfered goods. Four people were arrested, three escaped, and the remaining man was found guilty.

In the 1880s, a man named Thomas Madden was charged with mixing Spanish Fly (a substance that supposedly increases sexual desire) in a drink to give to Ann Smith, so that he might have "carnal knowledge of her." He was convicted in court.

In the late 1800s, Joseph Reddick killed a man. Reddick's attorney argued that his client was kicked in the head by a horse when he was six years old and lost a teaspoon of his brains. Some years later, Reddick was stabbed in the head near the former wound and a fragment of the knife remained in his head. Alas, these arguments failed, and Reddick got the death penalty.

A passenger on a stagecoach line sued the company because one of its drivers was drunk and spooked the horses, which began to gallop wildly. The passenger attempted to escape the coach and broke his leg. He sued and won $3,500.

James and Jackson Thompson of Shawnee County were charged with "operating an alias dram shop, alias tippling house" on Election Day and selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the law. The case became mired in complex arguments over the intent of the statute in question. Nathaniel Price lost the election for state senate from Doniphan County and claimed that the votes from people in military service were illegal. The board of canvassers upheld his decision, but it was overturned by the Kansas Secretary of State on a legal technicality.

In 1877, Republican Governor John St. John pressed the Kansas legislature to pass prohibition, that would outlaw the sale of liquor statewide. Representative Bob Wright of Dodge City argued, unsuccessfully, to exclude all of Kansas west of the 100th meridian because people in the western part of the state required "snakebite medicine" for survival.
