During the eleventh week of the Switchgrass Summer Art Program, a group of three children participated in a print-making session where they created monoprint artworks. The session began with the children choosing a shade of tempera paint. Next, they rolled the paint into a thin layer over a sheet of aluminum foil. Using a Q-tip, they practiced drawing simple designs and pulling the prints. They experimented with different colors and techniques and shared their results with one another. At the end of the class, the children took their art prints home.

In addition to the print-making activity, the children had the opportunity to produce embossed paper, which they decorated and added to their personal art journals to take home after the Switchgrass Summer Art Program.

Upcoming activities in the program include a class on Thursday, August 8, where students will engage in creating their large process painting art with a focus on movement. This class is open to students of all skill levels, including beginners, and will also involve utilizing stencils for their art journal project.

Following this, on Thursday, August 15, the program will offer an opportu-
