County fair is more than just a tradition

Valori Stone
Family and Community Wellness Agent, Wildcat Extension District

County fairs are more than just fun rides and funnel cakes; they're a cherished tradition that creates a sense of unity, bringing communities together while offering a range of benefits for people of all ages. These events support local agriculture, education, and social connection in meaningful ways.

County fairs highlight the importance of agriculture in daily life. Visitors can learn more about where their food comes from, helping raise awareness about farming and food production.

Educational exhibits and hands-on demonstrations teach both children and adults about the importance of agriculture in everyday life and appreciate the hard work that goes into farming and animal care.

Fairs provide hands-on learning for youth through 4-H and FFA programs. Young participants showcase their projects—ranging from animals to arts and crafts—gaining valuable skills in responsibility, communication, and leadership.

Encouraging Volunteerism and Civic Engagement, many county fairs rely on volunteers to operate, giving residents a chance to give back and get involved. This helps foster a spirit of service and pride in the community. Boosting the Local Economy. Local vendors, farmers, and artisans benefit from the increased foot traffic at fairs. It's a great time to shop local and discover unique goods while helping small businesses thrive.

Whether you're showing an animal, judging a pie, or enjoying a night out with the family, county fairs offer entertainment with purpose—celebrating tradition, education, and togetherness.

June is month for wheat harvest

Kim Baldwin,
McPherson County farmer and rancher

June is the month that tests my schedule and patience as we await the start of wheat harvest. For years my replies to a variety of invitations and requests have always defaulted to something to the effect of, "That's June, so if we're harvesting wheat we won't be able to."

June is the one month out of the entire year where I fully exercise being noncommittal.

Our June days are determined by whether the wheat is ready or not. If it's not ready, a last-minute invitation to have a friend over or spend a few hours at the city pool are possible. But if the wheat is ready, the day has already been intentionally made clear and our efforts are directed to getting the wheat out of the fields as quickly as possible ahead of any summer storms.

We generally have a pretty good idea of when our wheat harvest will take place on our farm based on history and memories posted on social media. Yes, some years we've started harvest earlier than normal, but we have established a "normal" harvest window give or take a few days based on the weather.

But there are exceptions, and this year is definitely one of those. We've passed the halfway point of the month of June, and with that, we have also passed our "normal" harvest window.

Normally we are in the thick of wheat harvest by this time of the month. I often joke that we will more often than not celebrate Father's Day with naps because everyone is experiencing a level of tiredness that only occurs during wheat harvest.

But not this year. We are still quite energized at this point in the month mostly because we have had so much rain. The rain has essentially halted all work. From finishing up soybean and sorghum planting to swathing hay and harvesting wheat, we have been unable to get into the fields simply because it's too wet.

We generally have completed our wheat harvest by the Fourth of July, and I begin thinking about and planning some family activities we'd like to do with the kids before they return to school in August. But this year, that might be pushed back as there's a pretty good chance that we'll still be harvesting wheat in early July.

I know the summer heat will soon turn up. I know that the Kansas winds will blow again. And I know that soon we will have dry fields and it will be "go time."

The combines are ready. The trucks are ready. The workers are ready. And as soon as we can go, we will.

But until then, I've decided to extend my practice of being noncommittal into a portion of July as well. Afterall, our wheat harvest is turning out to be anything but normal this year.

Mitigating the mosquito problem

Adaven Rohling
Diversified Agriculture and Natural Resource Agent, Wildcat Extension District

Sitting on the porch after a long day is one of my favorite relaxing ways. Unfortunately, mosquitoes also like visiting our porch and can be annoying. Along with being annoying, some mosquitoes can also transmit diseases that can affect people and animals. There are a couple of different approaches to controlling mosquitoes in your yard.

Making changes in your yard can make the habitat less favorable for mosquitoes. Mosquitoes require water to lay their eggs in and for the larvae to grow. Reducing the amount of standing water will, in turn, reduce the number of mosquitoes.

Look around your yard for spots where water accumulates after a rain and remove objects, like old tires, that hold water or regularly dump them. Fill in any low spots where water pools and clean out drainage ditches to ensure water can flow through them. Also, if you have bird baths or pet waterers, changing the water in them at least once a week will aid in reducing the mosquito population.

If standing water cannot be eliminated, larvicides made specially for mosquitoes can be added to control mosquitoes. Larvicide chemicals to look for include temephos (Abate), Bti, Bacillus thuringiensis israelensis (Teknar, Vectobac), and methoprene (Altosid).

They can usually be found at a local farm store or garden center. "Mosquito dunks" made from bacteria that kill mosquitoes and contain Bacillus thuringiensis israelensis (Bti) can also be added to small ponds to kill mosquito larvae. Another option to control mosquitoes if you have a small pond is to stock the pond with goldfish or minnows that will eat mosquito larvae.

Adult mosquitoes like to find places that are damp, dark, and cool to rest in during the daytime. Commonly, finding tall grasses, shrubs, or other vegetation is an ideal spot. Keeping grass and shrubs trimmed around the house will help deter mosquitoes. Spraying shrubs and other shaded areas with a residual insecticide to kill mosquitoes that try to hide in those areas is also an option. Appropriately labeled aerosol insecticide may be used.

Some active ingredients to look for in insecticides include carbaryl, malathion, and various pyrethroids (again, these ingredients usually end in -thrin). Read the insecticide label before applying to make sure the product is used according to the guidelines and will not harm vegetation to which it is applied.

While there are many mosquito traps available on the market, traps based on the release of CO_2 do not reduce the mosquito population to the level where there is a noticeable decline in mosquito numbers, and traps based on ultrasound technology are not effective for reducing the nuisance level.
